SUGGESTED WORDS FOR 10-YEAR-OLDS & OVER

Teenagers certainly talk about oral sex, speculate about it, and some engage in it. Sometimes it is used to avoid pregnancy. Many teenage girls have the experience of being expected to perform oral sex, and of being expected to take the whole erect penis down the throat. Many report having had the unpleasant experience of having their head shoved down on the erect penis, and gagging or feeling suffocated.

It is a good idea for children approaching the age of 12, at the latest, to learn about various kinds of oral sex. That way, they can know about its existence before they need to make decisions about it. Both boys and girls should be discouraged from expecting that girls will have to give oral sex to their boyfriends.

1. When grownups are feeling like having intercourse, or having sexual activity together, they might use their mouths on the penis or testicles or vagina or clitoris of the other person. They might have oral sex before intercourse; or maybe instead of having intercourse.
2. Many people like oral sex as part of their sex lives. Many don't like it. Lots of people try it out with their sexual partner, but no one should ever be forced.
3. Some teenagers start to experiment with oral sex, and think the girls should always give it to the boys. No person should ever be expected to give oral sex; it has to be a decision they make themselves.
4. Sexually transmitted diseases can be spread by oral sex. If people are going to have oral sex, they need to avoid getting semen, or pre-cum (the drop of semen that appears on the end of the penis before ejaculation), or vaginal juices in their mouths. If the woman is having her menstrual period, the person giving her cunnilingus can get her blood in their mouth. That might also spread an infection.

Some sexual infections cause sores which can spread germs or viruses if they are touched. That means germs or viruses can get into the mouth, if the mouth touches them.

5. Use a condom if you are ever having oral sex, even if he says he won't come. If you don't want the penis in your mouth, just use your tongue or
